Looking at cultural policy from the perspective of „Radical Diversity“ means breaking down existing hierarchies between the „Global North“ and the „Global South“. It means a radical democratization of cultural policy, a development towards fair and sustainable structures. Because social inequality, as a result of centuries of colonization processes, manifests itself in the discrimination of marginalized and minoritized artists and cultural workers.

What are „perspectives from the Global South“, and how do manifestations of existing hierarchies become effective in the form of discrimination, exclusion and racism in Austria's cultural sector? Which resistances in the interplay of internationalization, fairness & diversity have to be overcome?

The event allows to rethink international cultural exchange in (post)migrant Austria and to discuss concrete strategies for fair and sustainable cultural policies.

UNESCO Convention Diversity of cultural expressions

At the heart of the Convention is the safeguarding of an environment in which a diversity of art and culture can develop freely and is protected from a purely economic logic. With the provision of „preferential treatment“, the Convention focuses on global inequality structures and the disadvantages of the „Global South“ and addresses those problems that arise for artists and cultural workers as a result.
